ISLAND WINES

A determined group of wine-makers are creating some truly extraordinary and diverse wines from the mineral rich and mountainous soils of Mediterranean and Atlantic Islands. The combination of ancient vines and the freshness that comes from grapes farmed at high altitude is what makes these bottles so memorable.

NEW MASTERS OF OLD GRAPES

Often the old ways are the best, but not always. We love finding producers who are reinventing the way we look at certain wines while maintaining sometimes centuries old traditions, or reviving wines or regions that have been forgotten while innovating and leaving their own legacy. Make way for the new wave.

BURGUNDY

Synonymous with elegance and finesse, if you're looking for that extra special bottle, there's nothing quite like 'white burg'. Citrus and stone fruit, bracing minerality, buttery richness; all are hallmarks of the region. Along with the ubiquitous Chardonnay, Aligoté is gaining in reputation once again, and in the hands of the right wine maker can make wines with just as much character and enjoyment.

ALPINE

There are very few regions that are as synonymous with the natural wine movement as Jura and Savoie. Often compared to nearby Burgundy, both areas are known for their eclectic wines as well as wine makers, due to the varying terroir and strong local identity. Pioneering methods, small plots, extreme altitudes and unusual grape varieties make these some of the most exciting wines available today.

CHABLIS + THE WIDER REGION

The unmistakable steely and mineral character of Chablis is what brings us back to this region again and again. The cooler climate allows for less fruit and more texture, making these wines the perfect accompaniment to any seafood.

RIESLING

A lot of people steer clear of Riesling because they think it will be sweet. Yes, there are lots of fantastic examples of sweet Riesling. but when eating seafood we look to the drier styles. Precise, linear wines with bags of complexity.
